

17.4 Conditionals

Conditionals allow you to define special permissions to access one or more fields of the same module when a condition defined within it occurs, with the same logic as advanced filters.

When a condition occurs:

- one or more fields are rendered hidden;
- one or more fields are rendered read-only;
- one or more fields are rendered visible and editable;
- one or more fields are rendered mandatory;
- a combination of the above points is created.

These rules can be defined for users who belong to a role, a branch of the hierarchy, or a user group.

Examples of use.

a) In your business activity three types of company are classified (Customers, Partners and Competitors) through the Type field present in the registry. You also need to define an additional specification for each type, by preparing the Specify Customer, Specify Partner and Specify Competitor fields.

You can configure Conditionals as follows:

- if the company is Type = Partner, display the Specify Partner field and hide the Specify Customer and Specify Competitor fields (so that users cannot fill them in incorrectly);
- if the company is Type = Competitor, display only the Specify Competitor field;
- if the company is Type = Customer, display only the Specify Customer field.

b) You have prepared two blocks of information in the registry, one for commercial management and one for technical management. You want to give traders access to technical information, but you do not want to give them permission to change it. Through Conditionals you can redefine the access permissions on the individual fields of the "Technical Information" block by setting them as visible but not changeable for the commercial role.

Let's look at how to create and configure the rules.

Again, only the administrator user can access Settings > Conditionals.

Versioning: All settings for Conditionals can be saved, generating a version (e.g. v.1.0). Versions can be exported or imported to ensure a higher level of security during setup.

N.B.: the conditional fields are not managed by the mobile app, so the configurations made are valid only for the web version.
